Stone Mill Owner's list

This list is intended to encourage stone mill owners to contact each other, and visit each other, when they would like to have advice, regarding their mill maintenance. This could be especially useful for new owners, when the stones need re-dressing, or the stones need to be re-balanced, or even replaced. There are also other tasks that new stone mill owners will want to experience hands-on initially.

The skill of dressing granite millstones has been modernized and once learned is no more difficult than some other maintenance tasks needed on a piece of machinery. Some composite millstones are intended for lifetime use without dressing, but still need to be cared for properly, if they are to perform well for a lifetime.

In some cases, help with maintenance is available by directly contacting the makers of stone mills. In fact, the availability of such help should be part of determining which brand of stone mill to choose when initially purchasing.

If you are a stone mill owner producing flour for sale or use in a bakery selling the bread, and would like to be on this list, make a change to your listing, or if you would like to be removed from this list, please contact Monica Spiller: barmbaker@aol.com

Impact Mill Owner's list

There are only a few high-speed impact mill owners, but surely it will be useful for them to know each other and also to encourage others who are interested in this mode of producing extraordinarily fine bran and germ particles in the 100% whole grain flour, in a single step system. Note that the Unifine mill is being used, or has been used, for high extraction flours, but if operated without a sieve then valuable fine 100% whole grain flours can be produced.
